You Can Change Everything

Johnny Dunn has a photojournalism and fine arts background (UNC and Parsons; LinkedIn https://linkedin.com/in/jdfive) and is set to launch a production channel on YouTube called Narrative Dose, backed and funded by Manic.agency, which is launching its studio this year. This video is the studio's first production. It is free on YouTube; it is not a zero-budget production. Write to us at johnny@manic.agency.

What it is. It is a free video essay on You Can See Everything, the film by Nathan Fielder and Lance Oppenheim that A24 released on 16 October 2026, and on the Theranos record. It is an argued critique on the public record, with interviews if people agree to them, in three movements: The Greatest Story, The Greatest Con and The Greatest Product. It runs about 45 to 90 minutes. Every factual claim about a real person cites a court record or named reporting. Recollections, dramatizations and Johnny's own readings carry labels on screen. The video makes no medical claims.

The argument, as Johnny's reading. Reactions that claim to know the real Billy Evans are more certain than a built film allows, since the film's ending is a recreation from Fielder's memory, and making Billy Evans the villain does not prove the film failed Elizabeth Holmes. Told from the record, Holmes's product idea is, in Johnny's reading, the greatest product idea of all time if it could ever work. The video labels these as his reading and gives the strongest case against each at full weight.

Where and when. We intend to publish it free on the Narrative Dose YouTube channel in early November 2026, ideally while the film is still in theaters. Once published, it may stay online indefinitely and be seen worldwide.

What we ask. We prefer a recorded video or audio call of 20 to 30 minutes at a time that suits you, so your face or voice can be in the video if you want that. Written answers by email are welcome too, and the earlier we hear from you, the better. For a right of reply, we ask for a written statement as early as you can. If we have nothing from you when the edit is final, the video says when we asked and that we had no answer by then. If you tell us you would rather not respond, it says that instead.

How your contribution is used. Contributions are on the record and attributed to you by name. Any written answer gets you credited, with your work linked on the video's pages. If we use your recording, you are introduced with a title card in the film and named in the credits. If you ask for your contribution to stay out of the film or to go unnamed, we leave it out or unnamed. Words you have already published stay part of the record the video cites, by name. We may edit a contribution for length and keep its meaning, and AI tools never alter a contributor's words. Some or all of it may not be used, so appearing in the video is not promised. If you answer in writing, or we send questions in advance, the video says so on screen where your words appear.

Before and during recording. We confirm the day, the time, the format and these terms by email before we record. At the start of the recording we ask your permission to record and to publish, and we keep that part.

Editorial boundaries. The edit is ours. Contributors see no cut before release and have no copy approval. Before publication we may check facts with you. Everyone the video criticises gets a logged right of reply before publication. A response is reported fairly, and a refusal is reported too; it does not stop publication.

Promotion. We may promote the video on YouTube and on the studio's own channels, with short clips on YouTube Shorts and TikTok that carry the same labels. Short excerpts of your contribution may appear in this video's own trailer, thumbnail, description and posts about this video. They are never used in advertising for anything else.

Withdrawal. You may withdraw your contribution by written notice to johnny@manic.agency until the edit is final. After that it stays in the video.

AI. The video is made with AI tools, Claude among them. Our AI statement, sent with this sheet, says what Claude did and did not do.

Narrative Dose, a Manic Agency production. johnny@manic.agency. Issued Sat 31 Oct 2026 with an interview or statement request for You Can Change Everything, releasing in early November 2026 on YouTube.