You Can Change Everything

Johnny Dunn has a photojournalism and fine arts background (UNC and Parsons; LinkedIn https://linkedin.com/in/jdfive) and is set to launch a production channel on YouTube called Narrative Dose, backed and funded by Manic.agency, which is launching its studio this year. This video is the studio's first production. It is free on YouTube; it is not a zero-budget production. Write to us at johnny@manic.agency.

What it is. It is a free documentary essay on You Can See Everything, the film by Nathan Fielder and Lance Oppenheim that A24 released on 16 October 2026, and on the Theranos record. It is an argued critique on the public record, with interviews if people agree to them, in three movements: The Greatest Story, The Greatest Con and The Greatest Product. It runs about 45 to 90 minutes. Every factual claim about a real person cites a court record or named reporting. Recollections, dramatizations and Johnny's own readings carry labels on screen. The video makes no medical claims.

The argument, as Johnny's reading. Audiences read the film with more certainty than a built film allows, since its ending is a recreation from Fielder's memory, and making Billy Evans the villain does not prove the film failed Elizabeth Holmes. Told from the record, Holmes's product idea is, in Johnny's reading, the greatest product idea of all time if it could ever work. The video labels these as his reading and gives the strongest case against each at full weight.

Where and when. We intend to publish it free on the Narrative Dose YouTube channel on Saturday 31 October 2026. Once published, it may stay online indefinitely and be seen worldwide.

What we ask. We ask for a recorded video or audio call of 20 to 30 minutes at a time that suits you on Tuesday 27 or Wednesday 28 October 2026 (ET), or for written answers to five or six questions by Wednesday 28 October, 6 pm ET. For a right of reply, we ask for a written statement by Wednesday 28 October, 6 pm ET. If we hear nothing by then, the video says when we asked and that we had no answer by that time; if you tell us you would rather not respond, it says that instead.

How your contribution is used. Contributions are on the record and attributed to you by name. If the cut uses your contribution, you are introduced with a title card in the film and credited by name with your work in the credits and in the YouTube description. If you ask to stay out of the film or to go unnamed, we leave you out or unnamed. We may edit a contribution for length and keep its meaning, and AI tools never alter a contributor's words. Some or all of it may not be used, so appearing in the video is not promised. If you answer in writing, or we send questions in advance, the video says so on screen where your words appear.

Before and during recording. We confirm the day, the time, the format and these terms by email before we record. At the start of the recording we ask your permission to record and to publish, and we keep that part.

Editorial boundaries. The edit is ours. Contributors see no cut before release and have no copy approval. Before publication we may check facts with you. Everyone the video criticises gets a logged right of reply before publication. A response is reported fairly, and a refusal is reported too; it does not stop publication.

Promotion. We may promote the video on YouTube and on the studio's own channels, with short clips on YouTube Shorts and TikTok that carry the same labels. Short excerpts of your contribution may appear in this video's own trailer, thumbnail, description and posts about this video. They are never used in advertising for anything else.

Withdrawal. You may withdraw your contribution by written notice to johnny@manic.agency until the cut locks at 12:00 ET on Thursday 29 October 2026. After that it stays in the video.

AI. The video is made with AI tools, Claude among them. Our AI statement, sent with this sheet, says what Claude did and did not do.

Narrative Dose, a Manic Agency production. johnny@manic.agency. Issued Mon 26 Oct 2026 with an interview or statement request for You Can Change Everything, releasing Sat 31 Oct 2026 on YouTube.